“ "Mean Machine", i i ½ I am so proud that I represent your side of the family. I know I used to be the "bad seed", but I hope I've made you proud of the things I've done with my life. I wish I could have seen you more. I love you more than you will ever know and I miss you even more. I know you're in healthy and in a better place and I can't wait until the day I'll be with you and Grandpa. You're an amazing person and I look up to you in so many ways. Thanks for teaching mom how to cook fudge (which she still hasn't cooked for me yet :) and fried chicken, my favorite meal. I love you Grandma. Miss you.##imported-begin##Jessica Fowler##imported-end##

“ Death is one of those ironic twists in life that everyone knows is coming, but the trauma still remains very painful. The irony is that the person dying usually can accept their fate, while their family is left to first deny the loss and then finally grieve for the passing of their loved one. I am choosing to celebrate your life by including the life lessons you taught me so clearly throughout our years together on a daily basis:
1. Be as stubborn as possible ? Stand up for what is right.
2. Don?t mumble ? The best insight can be lost if the message cannot be heard.
3. Even geese must change their outfit ? Change is often painful, but the outcome is always worth the struggle.
Thank-you for these lessons, thank-you for my mother, and thank-you for looking over me now. I know I now have an extra angel on my team!!! I love you!
